OVERCOMING INTIMACY ISSUES FOR BOTH MEN AND WOMEN

Men and women both experience physical changes as they age and sometimes those changes result in problems with intimacy. These deeply personal issues can often be difficult to discuss. However, The Urology Group works with patients every day to develop treatment plans and begin finding solutions.

This special edition of YOUrology News features some of the treatments available to overcome those issues and enhance intimacy.

RELIEVING VAGINAL DRYNESS WITH MONALISA TOUCH®

Women discuss a lot of health issues with each other, but one that might feel a little more sensitive is the topic of vaginal changes, especially dryness.

However, vaginal atrophy is a common issue for post-menopausal women. Because of a decline in estrogen levels, about half of women in this stage of life experience symptoms like:

- Pain during intercourse
- Vaginal dryness and itching
- Burning during urination
- Frequent urinary tract infections

MonaLisa Touch

Women don't need to simply accept this as part of life, as MonaLisa Touch provides an advanced option to relieve those symptoms. With MonaLisa Touch, the urologist uses laser technology to deliver controlled energy that stimulates the production of collagen in the vaginal canal. Following the procedure, moisture levels increase and ease many of the symptoms.

Treatment consists of three sessions, each lasting less than five minutes. MonaLisa Touch can be performed in-office, requires no anesthesia and allows patients quick recovery.

Get back to enjoying this new chapter in life by talking with your urologist about treatment.

ERECTILE DYSFUNCTION TREATMENT OPTIONS

The most commonly discussed condition that affects intimacy is erectile dysfunction (ED). ED can stem from many causes, including high blood pressure, diabetes, neurologic disorders or other issues resulting from the aging process.

After evaluating the patient's condition and contributing health factors, the urologist may recommend treatment options such as:

- Medication: pharmaceuticals that enhance blood flow
- Intra-urethral therapy: medicated pellets inserted into the urethra

- Intracavernosal injection therapy: direct injections that increase blood flow into the penis
- Vacuum/constrictive devices: a vacuum device that draws blood into the penis; along with a rubber ring at the base, it can help maintain the erection
- Psychotherapy and behavioral therapy: consultation around psychosocial issues, such as performance anxiety or depression

Know you're not alone in struggling with ED; help is available.

PENILE PROSTHETIC IMPLANTS

Some men who experience chronic erectile dysfunction or who have been diagnosed with Peyronie's disease may benefit from a surgical penile prosthetic implant.

There are two common types of implants: malleable and inflatable.

- Malleable implant: Surgically installed, this implant consists of two malleable (bendable) rods. With it, a man merely lifts or adjusts the penis into the erect position to initiate sex. While it is the simplest implant, it does mean the penis is always semi-rigid, which some men don't prefer
- Inflatable implant: This custom-fit medical device is surgically placed into the penis to produce a natural-looking and natural-feeling erection. The inflatable prosthesis is effective and generally not noticeable to the other partner.

Last month a world-renowned physician, Dr. Steven K. Wilson, met with The Urology Group's Dr. Kevin Campbell to discuss the latest advancements in this surgery. Several physicians on The Urology Group's staff in addition to Dr. Campbell are highly skilled in this surgical area.
